Meet CHLT Easement Landowner Beverly Parsons:

My husband Clark and I bought our property in Grand Lake in 1995. I remember the day well. We were celebrating our first anniversary and it was one day after I learned I had breast cancer. It was something of an impulse purchase but one we never regretted. When we moved to Washington State ten years later, we subdivided the property, sold our Grand Lake home with a few acres and put the remaining 36 acres in a conservation easement with one building site. It has been a pleasure working with CHLT both in establishing the conservation easement and in its ongoing monitoring where each year we walk among the trees I love. While according to U.S. law we own the property, according to nature's laws we are stewards of the land, not owners. Thus, the conservation easement.
